James Thomas Jerman Dies of Heart Failure

James Jerman, a highly respected farmer living near Groton, died suddenly of heart failure early last Friday morning. Mr. Jerman had not been in the best of health for some time past, but recently every indication would be able to do his spring work condition. In fact, he thought that he would be able to do his spring work without employing additional labor, but on Friday morning Mrs. Jerman was awakened by his tossing and groaning, and upon lighting a lamp found that he was in a very dangerous condition. He breathed his last while Mrs. Jerman was trying to revive him.

Mr. Jerman was born at Warren, Pa., March 31st, 1883, and came to Groton in 1912, and in 1915 settled upon the Ayes farm which he tilled up to the time of his death.

September 7, 1920, he was married to Mrs. Louise Seeley, at Ladysmith, Wis., and to this union one son was born which died in infancy. He was a member of the Moose Lodge, of Warren, Pa., and also of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Mr. Jerman leaves to mourn his loss, his mother, Mrs. Susan Jerman, of Warren, Pa., and three brothers, George and William living in Pennsylvania, and Stephen, of West Virginia; three sisters, Mrs. M. A. Fehlman, of Pennsylvania and Mrs. Roy Rix and Mrs. Miles Bingham, of Groton, and also his aggrieved widow.

The funeral was held Sunday from the Methodist church with Rev. Norris conducting it, and interment was made in Groton cemetery.
